

1 PETER D. KEISLER
2 Assistant Attorney General, Civil Division
3 CARL J. NICHOLS
4 Deputy Assistant Attorney General
5 DOUGLAS N. LETTER
6 Terrorism Litigation Counsel
7 JOSEPH H. HUNT
8 Director, Federal Programs Branch
9 ANTHONY J. COPPOLINO
10 Special Litigation Counsel
11 ALEXANDER K. HAAS (SBN 220932)
12 Trial Attorney
13 Email: alexander.haas@usdoj.gov
14 U.S. Department of Justice
15 Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch
16 20 Massachusetts Avenue, NW
17 Washington, D.C. 20001
18 Phone: (202) 514-4782/(202) 307-3937
19 Fax: (202) 616-8470/(202) 616-8202

10 Attorneys for Federal Defendants Sued in their Official Capacities, 11 the Federal Intervenor-Defendants (United States of America, 12 National Security Agency, President George W. Bush), and the United States of America as Plaintiff against state officials

13 UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

14 NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

15 IN RE NATIONAL SECURITY AGENCY)
16 TELECOMMUNICATIONS RECORDS)
17 LITIGATION)

18 This Document Relates To:)

19 United States v. Volz, et al.)

20) No. M:06-cv-01791-VRW

21) No. 3:07-cv-01396-VRW

22) REPLY OF THE UNITED STATES IN 23 SUPPORT OF ITS MOTION FOR 24 SUMMARY JUDGMENT

25) Courtroom: 6, 17th Floor
26) Judge: Hon. Vaughn R. Walker
27) Hearing: June 14, 2007
28)

TABLE OF CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION.....	1
ARGUMENT.....	2
I. UNDER THE SUPREMACY CLAUSE, A STATE CANNOT DIMINISH THE AUTHORITY OF THE UNITED STATES BY REGULATING THIRD PARTIES.....	2
II. THE STATE DEFENDANTS CANNOT REDEFINE THEIR ACTIONS TO AVOID PREEMPTION UNDER THE CONSTITUTION AND FEDERAL LAW.....	5
III. THE STATE INVESTIGATION AND ORDER CONFLICT WITH FEDERAL LAWS PROSCRIBING THE DISCLOSURE OF NATIONAL SECURITY INFORMATION.....	8
CONCLUSION.....	11

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASE(S)	PAGE(S)
ACLU v. NSA , 438 F. Supp. 2d 754 (E.D. Mich. 2006).....	11
American Ins. Ass'n v. Garamendi , 539 U.S. 396 (2003).....	7
Black Hills Power & Light Co. v. Weinberger , 808 F.2d 665 (8th Cir. 1987).....	2
Fidelity Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n v. de la Cuesta , 458 U.S. 141 (1982).....	6
Free v. Bland , 369 U.S. 663 (1962).....	7
Goodyear Atomic Corp. v. Miller , 486 U.S. 174 (1988).....	3
Grafton & Upton R.R. Co. v. Town of Milford , 337 F. Supp. 2d 233 (D. Mass. 2004).....	3
Hancock v. Train , 426 U.S. 167 (1976).....	5
Hepting v. AT&T Corp. , 439 F. Supp. 2d 974 (N.D. Cal. 2006).....	11
Hines v. Davidowitz , 312 U.S. 52 (1941).....	5
Leslie Miller, Inc. v. Arkansas , 352 U.S. 187 (1956).....	3
Murphy v. Waterfront Comm'n of New York Harbor , 378 U.S. 52 (1964).....	5, 7
National Foreign Trade Council v. Natsios , 181 F.3d 38 (1st Cir. 1999), aff'd 530 U.S. 363 (2000).....	6
Pacific Gas and Elec. Co. v. State Energy Resources Conservation & Development Com'n , 461 U.S. 190 (1983).....	6
People for the Am. Way Found. v. Nat'l Security Agency/Cent. Security Service , 462 F. Supp. 2d 21 (D.D.C. Nov. 20, 2006).....	9
Perez v. Campbell , 402 U.S. 637 (1971).....	6
Public Utilities Comm'n v. United States , 355 U.S. 534 (1958).....	3
Stehney v. Perry , 907 F. Supp. 806 (D.N.J. 1995).....	4
Stehney v. Perry , 101 F.3d 925 (3d Cir. 1996).....	5
Terkel v. AT&T Corp. , 441 F. Supp. 2d 899 (N.D. Ill. 2006).....	11
United States v. Adams, et al. , ____ F. Supp. 2d ___, 2007 WL 441876 (D. Me. Feb. 8, 2007).....	10
United States v. Georgia Public Service Comm'n , 371 U.S. 285 (1963).....	3
United States/Temple Univ. v. City of Philadelphia , 798 F.2d 81 (1986).....	2

1	United States v. Locke , 529 U.S. 89 (2000).....	5
2	United States v. Massachusetts , 440 F. Supp. 2d 24 (D. Mass. 2006).....	3
3	United States v. Virginia , 139 F.3d 984 (4th Cir. 1998).....	3
4	Wayte v. United States , 470 U.S. 598 (1985).....	5
5	West River Elec. Ass'n, Inc. v. Black Hills Power & Light Co. , 918 F.2d 713 (8th Cir. 1990).....	2

6 STATUTES

7	National Security Agency Act of 1959, Pub. L. No. 86-36, § 6, 73 Stat. 63, 64	8, 9
8	50 U.S.C. § 403-1(i)(1).....	10

10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19 20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

INTRODUCTION

The United States submits this reply in support of its summary judgment motion. The United States' summary judgment motion ("USG Mem.") established that (1) the United States has a cause of action to vindicate its sovereign interests and assert its Supremacy Clause and preemption claims and that jurisdiction exists under 28 U.S.C. § 1345, see USG Mem. at 7-10; and (2) the Vermont State Defendants' Order and their investigation constitute an impermissible intrusion into the alleged operations of the Federal Government over which the State Defendants have no authority, and that their actions are otherwise preempted by federal law, id. at 11-25.

Reiterating several arguments from their motion to dismiss, the State Defendants oppose this motion on three principal grounds. First, the State Defendants argue that they are not interfering with federal functions because their order is directed at third-party telephone carriers and not the Federal Government itself. See State Defendants’ Opposition (“VT Opp.”) at 7-10. Second, the State Defendants’ assert that their investigation relates to telecommunications regulation, not foreign intelligence gathering, and is merely an inquiry into consumers’ rights and privacy. Id. at 11-14. Finally, the State Defendants argue that their actions do not conflict with federal law and are therefore not preempted. Id. at 17-25. These arguments are unmoored from the undisputed facts and rely on faulty interpretations of law.

First, there is no genuine issue that the State Defendants' Order and other activities concern alleged activities of the Federal Government over national security matters, i.e., whether a telecommunications carrier is assisting the NSA in carrying out alleged foreign intelligence activities. It is undisputed that the Constitution vests authority over the protection of national security in the Federal Government, and it is undisputed that federal law—both statutory law and the constitutionally-based state secrets privilege—governs the protection of information about alleged federal foreign intelligence activities and the disclosure of that information. The State Defendants therefore lack authority to order the disclosure of any information related to allegations that a telecommunications carrier is assisting the United States in an intelligence matter. It is clear, moreover, that Vermont cannot take such steps by seeking information from third parties, rather than the United States. The Supremacy Clause would be toothless if states

1 could interfere with federal functions simply by regulating third parties in a manner beyond their
2 constitutional authority.

3 Recognizing their lack of authority in this area, the State Defendants attempt to redefine
4 this case as one concerning the regulation of telecommunications regulation and consumer
5 protection. But the undisputed facts establish that State Defendants seek the disclosure of 6 information concerning alleged foreign intelligence activities of the NSA, and thereby directly
7 intrude on national security matters entrusted under the Constitution to the Federal Government.
8 The State Defendants simply cannot avoid the plain terms of their Order.

9 Finally, contrary to the State Defendants' strained reading of the law, their actions
10 directly conflict with, and thus are preempted by, numerous provisions of federal law.

11 ARGUMENT

12 I. UNDER THE SUPREMACY CLAUSE, A STATE CANNOT DIMINISH
13 THE AUTHORITY OF THE UNITED STATES BY REGULATING 14 THIRD PARTIES.

15 The State Defendants' chief response to the United States' motion for summary judgment 16 is that they have not "request[ed] information of any kind from the federal government, or 17 ask[ed] the federal government to do anything." See VT Opp. at 4. But the Supremacy Clause's
18 limitations on state power operate regardless of whether the legal incidence of a state's law falls
19 directly on the Federal Government or third parties. As the Eighth Circuit has explained, a 20 "state cannot diminish the constitutional authority of the United States government by regulating 21 the parties with whom it may contract." West River Elec. Ass'n, Inc. v. Black Hills Power &
22 Light Co., 918 F.2d 713, 716 n.6 (8th Cir. 1990) (quoting Black Hills Power & Light Co. v.
23 Weinberger, 808 F.2d 665, 669 n.4 (8th Cir. 1987)). Accord United States/Temple Univ. v. City 24 of Philadelphia, 798 F.2d 81, 87 (1986) (affirming summary judgment for the United States on 25 Supremacy Clause and preemption grounds where local ordinance prohibited third party law
26 school from allowing U.S. armed forces to recruit on campus because of "potential to frustrate"
27 federal operations in military recruiting). Thus, the mere fact that the State Defendants' Order 28 and investigation are directed at third-party telecommunications carriers does not authorize the State Defendants to investigate alleged federal activity. The Supremacy Clause limits state

1 regulatory power both when a state law applies to federal functions through third parties and to
2 the Federal Government directly. See, e.g., Goodyear Atomic Corp. v. Miller, 486 U.S. 174,
3 180-81 (1988); id. at 188 n.1 (White, J., dissenting).

4 For example, in Public Utilities Comm'n v. United States, 355 U.S. 534 (1958) and Leslie
5 Miller, Inc. v. Arkansas, 352 U.S. 187 (1956), the Supreme Court struck down state laws on 6 Supremacy Clause grounds that were both applicable to and enforceable against third parties.
7 The Court recognized that an attempted regulation of third parties may contravene the Supremacy
8 Clause, notwithstanding the fact that the State ostensibly has aimed its regulatory efforts at third
9 parties.¹ This remains the rule today. See, e.g., United States v. Virginia, 139 F.3d 984, 989-90
10 (4th Cir. 1998) (barring enforcement of state licensing requirements against independent 11 contractors whose conduct was already sanctioned under FBI standards). The State Defendants 12 also may not act indirectly either to achieve ends that they have no authority to reach directly or 13 to avoid the import of the Supremacy Clause. See United States v. Massachusetts, 440 F. Supp.
14 2d 24, 46-47 & n.188 (D. Mass. 2006) (holding an “indirect regulation seek[ing] to proscribe
15 rules for tank vessel operation” directed to private parties invalid under the Supremacy Clause 16 because they pertained to an exclusively federal field). See also Grafton & Upton R.R. Co. v.
17 Town of Milford, 337 F. Supp. 2d 233, 238 (D. Mass. 2004) (“a state ‘cannot regulate indirectly 18 . . . what it cannot regulate directly’”).

19 The State Defendants’ Order here is just as much an impermissible attempt to regulate the 20

21 ¹ In Public Utilities Comm'n, 355 U.S. 534, the Court held that California could not 22 prohibit common carriers from transporting federal government property at rates lower than those 23 approved by the State’s Public Utilities Commission. The Court concluded that the State’s law
24 impermissibly interfered with federal law requiring negotiated rates and the use of the “least 25 costly means of transportation.” Id. at 542. See also United States v. Georgia Public Service
26 Comm'n, 371 U.S. 285 (1963). In Leslie Miller, the Air Force had awarded a base construction
27 contract to a private firm, and the State then instituted proceedings against the contractor for its 28 failure to obtain a license under state law before executing the contract. The Court rebuffed that regulatory intrusion, concluding that the state licensing standards created “a virtual power of review over the federal determination of ‘responsibility.’” Leslie Miller, 352 U.S. at 190. The Court held that the State had no authority to regulate third-party Air Force contractors because the application of state law would “frustrate the expressed federal policy.” Id.

1 activities of the Federal Government as were the ill-fated regulatory efforts in Leslie Miller and 2 Public Utilities Comm'n.

3 It cannot be disputed that the State Defendants' Order and investigation concern alleged 4 activities of the Federal Government over national security matters, i.e., whether a
5 telecommunications carrier is assisting the NSA in carrying out alleged foreign intelligence
6 activities. Indeed, the clear object of the Vermont inquiry is "an effort to determine whether the 7 Carriers violated state law," see VT Opp. at 8, through their purported involvement in alleged 8 foreign intelligence gathering operations of the United States. Even a cursory examination of the 9 Order's plain language confirms that they seek information about the Carrier Defendants' alleged 10 relationship with the NSA and the operational details, if they exist, over alleged federal 11 intelligence operations. The State Defendants' Order seeks to compel the carrier to, inter alia,:
12 (i) state whether it "disclosed or delivered to the [NSA] the phone call records of any []
13 customers in Vermont at any time since January 1, 2001;" (ii) "identify the categories of 14 information [] provided to the NSA, including the called and calling parties' numbers; date of 15 call; time of call; length of call, name of called and calling parties; and the called and calling
16 parties' addresses;" (iii)"[s]tate whether the disclosures of [] Vermont customer call information
17 to the NSA and/or any state or federal agency is ongoing" and the "number of occasions" the 18 alleged disclosures occurred; (iv) confirm whether it "modified any of its equipment or other
19 physical plant in Vermont to permit access to data and other information carried on its network
20 by any agency of the federal government." See Exh. C to Compl. ¶¶ 1-16.

21 The State Defendants' attempt to distinguish this case from Stehney v. Perry, 907 F.
22 Supp. 806 (D.N.J. 1995), clearly fails. Stehney supports the United States' position because it
23 rejected claims, which stemmed from loss of employment at a non-profit agency following an 24 employee's refusal to take a polygraph examination, under a state anti-polygraphing law. The 25 Court concluded that the state law was expressly preempted by the Constitution and federal 26 statutes because "there can be no state regulation of a President's constitutionally granted powers
27 to 'classify and control access to information bearing on national security and to determine 28 whether an individual is sufficiently trustworthy to occupy a position . . . that will give that

1 person access to such information.”” Id. at 824-25. The State Defendants’ attempt to distinguish
2 Stehney fails. The State Defendants assert that they seek access “to unclassified data and 3 information.” See VT Opp. at 10. But the Stehney Court recognized that any “State regulation in 4 the area of national security is expressly preempted by Article I, § 8 and Article II, § 2 of the 5 Constitution,” 907 F. Supp. at 824. Indeed, the Third Circuit, in affirming the district court’s
6 opinion in Stehney, noted that state limitations on third-parties that would hinder participation as 7 NSA contractors would be “impermissible state interference with exclusive federal responsibility
8 in matters of national security” even though such regulation would only apply to private entities,
9 not the Federal Government directly. See Stehney v. Perry, 101 F.3d 925, 939 (3d Cir. 1996).
10 The constitutional inquiry focuses on authority, and the State Defendants have made no
11 meaningful effort to establish any authority for state officials under federal law (as there is none)
12 over foreign intelligence gathering. See Hines v. Davidowitz, 312 U.S. 52, 62 (1941) (“the 13 supremacy of the national power in the general field of foreign affairs . . . is made clear by the 14 Constitution.”).

15 II. THE STATE DEFENDANTS CANNOT REDEFINE THEIR ACTIONS TO AVOID PREEMPTION UNDER THE CONSTITUTION AND FEDERAL LAW.

16 The State Defendants’ attempt to avoid federal preemption through several other 17 meritless arguments.

18 First, the State Defendants argue that there is a presumption against preemption. See VT
19 Opp. at 6 & 13. But the Supreme Court has repeatedly observed that where a State attempts to 20 regulate “in an area where there has been a history of significant federal presence” there is no
21 presumption against preemption. See United States v. Locke, 529 U.S. 89, 108-09 (2000) (no 22 presumption against preemption where state attempted to regulate in a clearly federal area). And,
23 the Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized the “paramount federal authority in safeguarding 24 national security,” under the Constitution, Murphy v. Waterfront Comm’n of New York Harbor, 25 378 U.S. 52, 76 n.16 (1964), as “[f]ew interests can be more compelling than a nation’s need to 26 ensure its own security.” Wayte v. United States, 470 U.S. 598, 611 (1985). If anything, in the 27 field of national security, any presumption cuts the other way. Hancock v. Train, 426 U.S. 167,
28

1 179 (1976); see USG Mem. at 11-14. As the First Circuit has noted, the preemptive force of
2 federal law “will be more easily found where states legislate [or regulate] in areas traditionally 3 reserved to the federal government, and in particular where [as here] state laws touch on foreign
4 affairs.” National Foreign Trade Council v. Natsios, 181 F.3d 38, 73 (1st Cir. 1999), aff’d 530
5 U.S. 363 (2000). Any suggestion that there is not a body of law occupying the field of foreign
6 intelligence gathering is not credible. The federal laws cited by the United States, see USG
7 Mem. at 15-25, form a comprehensive scheme over the entire field of national security and 8 foreign intelligence—including in particular the disclosure of national security information.
9 There is no room for state regulation of this area. See Pacific Gas and Elec. Co. v. State Energy
10 Resources Conservation & Development Com’n, 461 U.S. 190, 204 (1983). Indeed, the 11 pervasive federal control over foreign intelligence matters and the dominance of the federal 12 interest is so evident that the federal law should be assumed to preclude enforcement of state
13 laws. See id.; Fidelity Federal Savings & Loan Ass’n v. de la Cuesta, 458 U.S. 141, 153 (1982).

14 Second, at various points, the State Defendants assert that their actions only constitute 15 “regulat[ion] [of] intrastate telecommunications matters” and “to protect consumers,” see VT
16 Opp. at 13. These assertions of the State Defendants’ subjective intent, even if they were 17 assumed accurate, are irrelevant. State officials may not avoid preemption by “articulating some 18 state interest or policy-other than frustration of the federal objective.” See Perez v. Campbell, 19 402 U.S. 637, 652 (1971); see also Hancock, 426 U.S. at 179-82 (invalidating nondiscriminatory
20 state law because it interfered with federal activities). Moreover, the State Defendants’ attempts
21 to recast their Order as relating to telephone regulation or consumer protection within state
22 competence simply cannot be reconciled with the undisputed facts. This case concerns the State
23 Defendants’ attempts to gain information about the Carrier Defendants’ alleged participation in 24 an alleged foreign intelligence program of the NSA. It is undisputed that the central allegations 25 that caused the State Defendants to petition for the investigation were “the alleged disclosure of 26 customer information to the National Security Agency and any other state or federal agency.”
27 See Exh. D to Compl., ¶¶ 3-5 (emphasis added); see also Exh. E to Compl. at 1. It is undisputed 28 that virtually all of the specific requests for information either expressly refer to the NSA or any

1 other federal agency by name or pertain to allegations concerning an alleged federal intelligence
2 gathering operations. See Exh. C to Compl. ¶¶ 1-16.

3 Equally irrelevant is the State Defendants' claim of the importance of their investigation
4 to Vermont, or that the State Defendants are merely trying to determine whether the Carrier
5 Defendants violated Vermont laws. See VT Opp. at 9. "The relative importance to the State of 6 its own law is not material when there is a conflict with a valid federal law, for the Framers of 7 our Constitution provided that the federal law must prevail." See Free v. Bland, 369 U.S. 663,
8 666 (1962). While, as a general matter, a state may regulate business practices within its borders,
9 a state may not, consistent with our federal system, exercise such authority in a way that intrudes
10 on the constitutional authority of the Federal Government, particularly in the areas of national 11 security and foreign affairs. See, e.g., American Ins. Ass'n v. Garamendi, 539 U.S. 396, 420 12 (2003) (state legislation unconstitutional where it produces "more than incidental effect in 13 conflict with express foreign policy of the National Government"); Murphy, 378 U.S. at 76 n.16
14 (stressing the "paramount federal authority in safeguarding national security") (quotation 15 omitted).

16 Finally, the State Defendants' assertion that their actions only incidentally relate to 17 foreign relations or national security, see VT Opp. at 12-14, is untenable. The Vermont
18 investigation and Order squarely focus on the NSA and other agencies of the Federal 19 Government. Indeed, the entire investigation is premised on the carriers' alleged involvement in 20 alleged federal intelligence activities, see Exhs. D-F to Compl., and the information requests are 21 directed at the alleged participant in an alleged federal intelligence operation. The State
22 Defendants do not dispute that any response by the Carrier Defendants would, at a minimum,
23 confirm or deny: (i) whether the Carrier Defendants were involved in the alleged foreign
24 intelligence gathering program of the United States; (ii) whether an espionage agreement exists
25 between the Carrier Defendants and the United States; (iii) if the program exists, as the State
26 Defendants assert, the precise nature of the alleged involvement and the details surrounding the 27 alleged NSA activities. See Exh. C to Compl. at ¶¶ 1-16. In short, given the unambiguous terms
28 of the information requests, the State Defendants cannot establish the purported "incidental

1 contact with an area of federal authority” by relying on bald assertions unmoored from the facts.

2 The State Defendants also attempt to distance their conduct from the preempted state
3 conduct in Garamendi by asserting that their activities “cannot be construed as an attempt to 4 fashion an alternative intelligence-gathering approach or a national security policy inconsistent
5 with that of the federal government.” See VT Opp. at 15. But that too is specious. The State
6 Defendants’ demand for extensive information (if it exists) about national security policy would 7 clearly conflict with federal law and policy to protect such information and would establish a
8 state policy for the disclosure of such information.²

9 III. THE STATE INVESTIGATION AND ORDER CONFLICT WITH FEDERAL
10 LAWS PROSCRIBING THE DISCLOSURE OF NATIONAL SECURITY INFORMATION.

11 The State Defendants’ argument that their actions do not conflict with the federal laws or 12 otherwise frustrate federal policy are deeply flawed. The United States has already addressed the 13 unsupported statutory arguments of the State Defendants. See USG Opp. at 16-19. Section 6 of 14 the National Security Agency Act, the federal statute protecting intelligence sources and methods
15 from disclosure and the federal statute criminalizing release of classified information as well as 16 federal common law doctrines clearly conflict with the State Defendants investigation and Order
17 requiring disclosures of information from the carriers.

18 Section 6 of the National Security Agency Act, which protects “any information with 19 respect to the activities” “or any function” of the NSA from disclosure under “any other law,” see
20 National Security Agency Act of 1959, Pub. L. No. 86-36, § 6, 73 Stat. 63, 64, codified at 50
21 U.S.C. § 402 note (emphasis added), clearly applies here. By their terms, the information

22

23 ² The State Defendants also suggest that the provisions of the Foreign Intelligence
24 Surveillance Act or the Electronic Communications Privacy Act (which they refer to as the “Pen 25 Register Act”) demonstrate a lack of preemption. See VT Opp. at 14-15. This argument is 26 meritless. Neither statute demonstrates a lack of preemption, but, rather, demonstrate further that 27 any alleged foreign intelligence activities are matters of federal, not state, law. The United States
28 cited a range of federal law that preempts the State Defendants’ authority, and the fact another provision of federal law concerns federal intelligence activities does not demonstrate why the disclosure of information related to such alleged activity would become subject to state regulatory authority and law.

1 requests at issue demand information about alleged NSA activities; indeed, the alleged program
2 of the NSA is singled out in those requests. See Exh. C to Compl. The express statutory 3 restriction in Section 6 on requiring disclosure of “any” information under “any other law” is 4 met. Indeed, the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia held that Section 6 of the 5 National Security Agency Act does protect information concerning all alleged NSA activities.
6 See People for the Am. Way Found. v. Nat'l Security Agency/Cent. Security Service, 462 F. Supp.
7 2d 21, 28-31 (D.D.C. Nov. 20, 2006). There, the Court confirmed that any claimed “illegality [of 8 alleged NSA activities] cannot be used in this case to evade the ‘unequivocal[]’ language of 9 Section 6, which ‘prohibit[s] the disclosure of information relating the NSA’s functions and 10 activities.’” Id. at 31 (citations omitted). While the State Defendants assert that courts have 11 expressed doubt over the breadth of Section 6, see VT Opp. at 18, they provide no explanation of 12 why their order, which requires disclosure under “any other law,” would trump Federal law in 13 any event. According to the State Defendants, despite the express terms of Section 6, state
14 regulators are free from federal proscriptions on disclosure of information pertaining the NSA 15 functions and may investigate the activities of any entity regulated under state law (which 16 undoubtedly would cover each and every non-governmental entity in the United States) to 17 determine (i) whether those private entities have dealings with the NSA, and (ii) what the details
18 are, if any, of those relationships. If the State Defendants’ interpretation were correct, Section 6
19 would be toothless because it could be evaded by any state regulator. There is no support in case 20 law or legislative history for such a theory.

21 There is also no support for the State Defendants’ assertion, in response, that Section 6
22 only applies in Freedom of Information Act (“FOIA”) cases and therefore is inapplicable to a 23 case of a private party responding to a state agency. See VT Opp. at 19. Such a reading is 24 contrary to the clear language of the statute, which protects from disclosure “any information
25 with respect to the activities” “or any function” of the NSA from disclosure under “any other

1 law.”³ Moreover, such an interpretation would permit greater disclosure of national security
2 information under state law than is permitted under FOIA, which is an untenable legal position.
3 To the extent that private parties have information regarding the NSA’s activities or functions,
4 the statute’s express terms clearly apply because a state’s attempt to force such disclosures would
5 constitute an attempt to use “any other law” to obtain “any information” about NSA’s functions
6 and activities. Such a direct conflict between state law and federal law as is presented here on 7 the face of the Order and the federal statute demands that federal law prevail under the 8 Supremacy Clause.

9 The federal statute protecting intelligence sources and methods—codified at 50 U.S.C.
10 § 403-1(i)(1)—also clearly preempts the State Defendants’ authority. Congress has established
11 that the exclusive responsibility of a federal actor—the DNI—to protect intelligence sources and 12 methods. Despite this clear congressional determination, the State Defendants seek to exercise
13 the authority of the DNA with regard to national security information. See United States v.
14 Adams, et al., __ F. Supp. 2d __, 2007 WL 441876, *9 (D. Me. Feb. 8, 2007) (noting that it is 15 “painfully obvious that, in making assessments about the impact of [a state order] on national 16 security, the [state agency] is acting beyond its depth”). As Judge Woodcock recognized in 17 Adams, state regulators may have expertise to “regulate public utilities,” but are “not charged 18 with evaluating threats to national security, investigating the NSA, or holding businesses in 19 contempt when their silence was mandated by the federal government.” Id. Thus, when 20 confronted with a divergence of opinion as to the national security implications of a state Order,
21 as between the Federal Government, which is charged with ensuring national security, and state 22 regulators charged with state utility regulation, the state position must give way under the 23 Supremacy Clause. See id.

24 Congress has specifically proscribed, as a matter of federal statutory law, the disclosure of

25
26 ³ This argument also makes no sense. While cases addressing NSA’s statutory 27 exemption, in the context of a FOIA request, hold that Section 6 qualifies as an exemption 3
28 statute under federal law, Section 6 was passed in 1959 many years before FOIA existed and it therefore applies to attempts to disclose information, not just under FOIA, but under “any other law.”

1 intelligence-related information, and the State Defendants have no authority under state law to
2 inquire into this area.⁴ The state secrets privilege is yet another source of federal law showing
3 that the authority to protect information related to federal national security matters is derived 4 from the President's constitutional authority over national security matters, and the authority to 5 protect information through this privilege resides with the head of the federal agency within the 6 Executive branch of the United States Government—in this instance, the DNI. See USG Mem.
7 at 14-16, 18-20. In sum, the U.S. Constitution, federal statutes and federal common law establish
8 federal policy regarding the non-disclosure of matters concerning alleged foreign intelligence
9 activities, and the State Defendants' attempts to investigate and force disclosure of such 10 information directly conflict with federal law and are preempted by federal law.

11 CONCLUSION

12 For the foregoing reasons, and those in the United States' motion for summary judgment,
13 the Court should grant summary judgment in favor of the United States.

14 DATED: April 5, 2007

Respectfully Submitted,

15 PETER D. KEISLER
16 Assistant Attorney General, Civil Division

17 CARL J. NICHOLS
18 Deputy Assistant Attorney General

19 DOUGLAS N. LETTER
20 Terrorism Litigation Counsel

JOSEPH H. HUNT

21

⁴ The State Defendants also cannot genuinely dispute the fact that the DNI and NSA have 22 sought to protect this information in federal courts. The Court should also take notice that every 23 court to consider whether information concerning the alleged NSA records program is subject to the protection of federal law has upheld privilege assertions over this information, including 24 whether or not any information even exists. See Terkel v. AT&T Corp., 441 F. Supp. 2d 899, 917
(N.D. Ill. 2006) (dismissing telephone records case on state secrets grounds); ACLU v. NSA, 438
25 F. Supp. 2d 754, 765 (E.D. Mich. 2006) (dismissing, on state secrets grounds, "data-mining" claims regarding alleged NSA records activities); Hepting v. AT&T Corp., 439 F. Supp. 2d 974, 998 (N.D. Cal. 2006) (declining to permit discovery into allegations about AT&T's involvement 26 in an alleged communication records program). This shows that the subject matter and law governing disclosure of the information at issue lies within the province and authority of the 27 Federal Government.

1 Director, Federal Programs Branch
2
3

4 ANTHONY J. COPPOLINO
5 Special Litigation Counsel
6
7

8 /s/ Alexander K. Haas
9 ALEXANDER K. HAAS (SBN 220932)
10 Trial Attorney
11 U.S. Department of Justice
12 Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch
13 20 Massachusetts Avenue, NW
14 Washington, D.C. 20001
15 Phone: (202) 514-4782/(202) 307-3937
16 Fax: (202) 616-8470/(202) 616-8202
17 Email: alexander.haas@usdoj.gov
18
19 20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28